

2013 Ammunition Hall of Fame Inductee

JIMMY MORGAN

Mr. Jimmy Morgan entered the Senior Executive Service in 1985 as the Deputy for Procurement and Production for the U.S. Army Armament Munitions and Chemical Command (AMCCOM). He was the principal policy advisor to the AMCCOM Commanding General and Deputy Commanding General on all matters pertaining to the command's multi-billion dollar procurement and production mission.

While serving as the Deputy for Acquisition and Single Manager for Conventional Ammunition (SMCA) he had maximum authority for oversight and administration of the contracting functions and office with respect to the Army ammunition budget; assigned procurement appropriations (PA) ammunition programs; Conventional Ammunition Working Capital Fund (CAWCF) budget; execution, pricing; ammunition product line; total quality management; administrative; and automation services applicable to AMCCOM procurement.

Faced with continued Army downsizing, austere funding, and declining budget challenges, his organization met these challenges head-on implementing extensive automation and streamlining efforts across the board to improve operations and achieve maximum resource efficiencies and effectiveness of the acquisition and SMCA missions.

Mr. Morgan's efforts to achieve cost savings by base lining processes to deal with customer satisfaction and new environments resulted in increased productivity. This organizational flattening and streamlining, which he spearheaded, brought about the smooth transition to the new organization and mission accomplishment.

Jimmy later became the Director, Armament and Chemical Acquisition and Logistics Activity (ACALA) for the Tank and Automotive Command (TACOM) where he continued as an ammunition advocate, linking ammunition to the weapons system.
